NEW BOUNDARY BETWEEN RUSSIA AND CHINA

FINANCIAL PROGRESS OF FRANCE,

&c., &c.

The mails of the Niagara reached this city from Bosto yesterday evening. Our European files are dated in Paris on the 10th and in London on the 11th instant. The telegraphic semmary from Halifax, which appeared in the HERLID on Thursday morning, contained the main features of the news. We publish the following interesting correspondence and extracts from the papers:—

The leading articles of the Paris journals of the 10th nstant are not of any very striking interest: the Constitutionnel continuing its remarks on criminal justice in France the Pays treating of the Danish question; the Patrie dis cussing the question of tithes in England; and the Debals the Gazette de France and the Union appearing without any original remarks.

The Paris Press, of the 10th justant, speaking of the cessity which exists for France to lay down an electric telegraph to the United States, if she wishes to mainfain undiminished her present commercial relations with American continent, declares that France is now toodependant on England for her communications with

FRANKPORT ON THE MAIN, Sept. 2, 1858. Russian Treaty with China-Boundary between the Empires-Entraordinary Calm in Politics on the Continent-

Since mailing my last further news has reached here of e Russian-Chinese treaty concluded by General Mura vieff on the 28th of May last, in regard to the boundary between the two empires. The left bank of the river Amoor is not wholly the frontier between the two emwith the Argun, which from that point receives the name of Amoor till it empties into the Ussuri. The boundary then runs also to the right of the river Amoor down to about 45 deg. North latitude. The Russians enjoy the free navigation of the Useuri and Sungari, and the Chinese that of the Amoor.

The news of this treaty had reached the town of Irkstak on the lat of July, and was received with great rejoicings. Immense preparations are making to organize potengs. Immense preparations are making to organize settlements on the river, and to build a capital some three hundred versts up the river.

You will have perceived the extraordinary rise in French three per cents and Credis Mobilier. It was the last rocket fixed at the Cherbourg celebration, and I trust it will remain a sing that above the horizon, as the last rocket after a great fixework awaily does. Various at tempts of the bears to kneet a again down below 70 have failed, and 70 is now the minimum quotation, resulting from the present political and financial situation; vix., China paeliled, the Taris conferences closed, the difficulty with Napies settled, and Count Cavour obliged, like Icarus, to take his flight to heaven—solitary and alone. The world is reveiling in peace, and the itank of France is about to reduce its discount to 2½ per cent. The buke of Maia-toff himself does not wish to disturb the calm for the present, and defers his nuptials till the return of the Emperor to Paris.

THE CABLE IN EUROPE.

Banquet to Sir Charles Bright in Killarney—
The Stoppage of the Continuity, &c., &c.
On the evening of the 7th inst. a grand entertainment was given by the gentry of the county Kerry, Ireland, in honor of the successful laying of the Atlantic telegraph cable, to which, amongst other distinguished guests, his Excellency the Lord Licentenant was invited. The dinner was given in the principal apartment of the magnificent Bailway Hotel, eracted at Killarney, and the company, which numbered over one hundred, was, for the most part, of an extremely select and influential character, a result which was in some measure attributable to the unusually high proce of the dinner tickets. The apartment and line of tables were handsomely decorated with flowers, and behind the principal seat a stand was formed of the English and American flegs united.

The chair was occupid by the Right Hon. H. A. Herbeet, M. P. Upon his right was seated his Excelency the Lord Lieutenant; on his left being Mr. Gurney, the chairman of the Atlantic Telegraph Company. The other goests at the principal table were the Duke of Manchester, the Knight of Kerry, Lord Otto Fitzgerald, Colonel I, there, Professor Thompson, G. Roe, W. C. Kane, Mr.
V. B. O'Cennor, &c.
At a quarter to ten o'clock the Chairsman, in proposing the teast of "The Queen," said, upon an occasion like the present, when they were assembled to do honor to the economic termumb which had been achieved, he might he sending messages of peace and good will to our cousins on the other side of the Atlantic.

The toast of the Prince Consort, Prince of Wales, and the rest of the royal family having been likewise drunk,

The-Charkan said the next toast which he had the honor to propose was the health of the noblemen who had that night honored their festivities with their presence, with the apritment of "Presperity to Ireland." (Cheers.) He (the Chairman) had the honor of serving under the predecessor of his Excellency the previous Lord Lieutenart, who wen the hearts of all connected with him by his nobleness and disinterestedness. He glanced for some moments at that reunembrance, and he could assure his Excellency that it did not in the slightest degree detract from the sincerity with which that day he had bid him welcome to his house by the lake, and with which he, in the name of the gentlemen of Kerry, bid him welcome to their ancient kingdom. There was once a time when it would have seemed a mockery to drink to the prosperity of Ireland. Happily that time was now at an end, although he did not mean to say there was not much to be done towards developing the commercial resources of the country, by improving its agriculture and promoting habits of prudence and cleanliness amongst their people; those results, hewever, could not be the work of any government. (Cheers.) It should be accomplished by the merchants and gentry, and by the energy and industry of the people themselves; but he did believe that so far as it was possible fer a government to encourage the agriculture of Ireland, it would be done by the noble lord who now filled the effice of Lord Lieutenaut. Difforing as he had with the noble lord on many political points, having been connected with the government of which his lord-hip was a chivalrous opponent, still he, the chairman, believe of that they never had a lord lieutenant more sincerely anxious for the prosperity of gentlemen, but I on this occasion feel it connected with my predecessor. There has been no occasi of being present at that splendid banquet and in the presence of his excediency on the occasion.

Professor Thomrson also responded, and said that he looked upon it as a great bonor to have been at all connected with an undertaking of such importance. He was proud to say that he had been a director of the Atlantic Tolegraph from the beginning. (Applause.) They should feel rejoiced at the great success which had been achieved. Arduous labors and great skill had been bestowed on the carrying out of the works of the company by those in whose hands the execution of the tasks had been put. The day before the work was completed it was said to be a chimera. Electricians doubted the possibility of sending the current through a wire of 2,000 miles long, and submerged in the sea to a depth of more than two miles, but the genius of a great man anticipated that difficulty, and to Mr. Whitehouse they must look as the man who had removed the barrier between Great Britain and America. (Cheers.) Professor Thompson then alluded to a subject which he confessed was a painful one—namely, the probability of getting over the difficulty which was at present felt in continuing the communication. He was unable to give any decided answer to the question, but greater difficulties had been overcome. Buy after day, during the expedition, the cable had failed, but again vost the continuity resoured. There could be no doubt that a most serious defect now existed in the cable, and the only question was whether that defect would be remedied at the defective point, so as not to have it necessary to furnish a new piece of cable; but great as the discouragement was, the fact of having accomplished telegraphic communication between Great Britain and America remained, all difficulties sank into insignificance before that fact. In conclusion, he expressed a confident hope that what had thus been accomplianed would in the end be attended with a complete and lasting success. (Applause). His Excellency the Lord Likerranay then rose and said it afforded

The control of the co

the points which human enterprises would look look and when we consider the great results that will flow from the enterprise, we are at a loss here how sufficiently to admire the genius and energy of those who planned it, or how to be sufficiently thankful to the Almightly for having delegated such a power to the human race, for whose benefit it is to be put in force. (Cheera,) And it us look at the career which this telegraph has passed since it was first discovered. At first it was rapidly laid over the land, uniting States, communities and countries—extending over hills and valleys, roads and railways—but the sea appeared to present an impenetrable barrier. It could not stop here, however, submarine telegraphy was but a question of time; and the first enterprise by which it was introduced was in connection with an eid for—and at present our best friend—imperial France. (Hear, hear.) The next attempt which was successful was, I believe, the junction of England and our island, and which was, I believe, carried out by the same distinguished engineer, whose name is now in the mouth of every man. (Hear, hear.) other submarine attempts rollward; the telegraph then paused before the great Atlantic, like another Alexander, weeping as if it had no more worlds to conquer; but it has found another world, and it has gained it, not bringing strile or conquest, but carrying with it peace and good will. (Applause.) I feel I should be wanting if I did not allude in terms of admiration to the genus and skill of the origineer, Sr Charles It Bright, who has carried out this enterprise, and to the zeal and courage of those who brought it on successful termination. (Applause.) It is not necessary, I am certain, to call attention to the dispence and attention shown by the crew of the Agamemnon—(cheers)—because I am sure there is no one here who has not read the description of the voyage in the newspapers. The zeal and enterprise were only to be equalled by the skill with which I was on the 5th of August, 1563, that Sir Hugh Gilbe menced. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Gurasus, who was received with loud applause, briefly returned thanks on behalf of himself and the directors of the Atlantic Telegraph Company, for the honors which had been done them by that assembly, and expressed his gratification at being off and the opportunity

Lands intersected by a narrow firth Abhor each other;
but that they will, by mutual intercourse, arrive at the last line of that stanza, and "like kindred drops, be mingled into one." (Warm applause.)

The Charman ent proposed the "Health of the President of the United States."

The next hoast was "The Army and Navy," which was responded to by Major-General Stokes.

The Charman, in complimentary terms, proposed the "Health of Mr. Gorney, Mr. Cyrus Field, and the Directors of the Atlantic Telegraph Company." Although they might for a time be discouraged by the fact of the interruption of the communication which had lately occurred, still the broad fact remained that a messcage had flashed from one hemisphere to another, and what had occurred already would occur again. They had present Mr. Gurney, the chairman of the company, and they had Professor Thompson—(cheers)—who was the director chiefly concerned in the management of the undertaking, and who accompanied the Agamemnon in her perflows voyage. He had reason to believe this gentleman would be able to give explanations that would in a great way modify that damp which had naturally been cast on the spirit of all present on bearing that some difficulty had interfered with the composition of the triumph. He was sure they would give an assurance that should the present undertaking, like its predecessor, prove fulle, they still had energy sufficient to carry out the great undertaking which they had commenced. (Hear, hear.)

(From the London Times, Sept. 9.)

Up to yesterday evening no communication of any kind, telegraphic or otherwise, had been received at the office of the Atlantic Telegraph Company, as to the operations supposed to be going on at Valentia to ascertain the point of interruption of the electric signals, since the message from Mr. Saward, the secretary of the company, dated from that place on Saturday, and which appeared in our impression of Monday. The directors, accompanied by Mr. Saward and several practical electricians, are still at Valentia; but at present the officials of the company left in London are without any information as to what has been done there to discover the piace of stoppage or the result. The permanent shore end of the cable intended for the Valentia end, and which is much stronger and thicker than the rest, and calculated to resist the greater amount of risk to which it is exposed as it approaches the landing place, is now being embarked at Plymouth, and will be conveyed to its destination without delay. The impression still obtains among the company's servant that the point of interruption is at no great distance from the shore at the Valentia termination, and this derives confirmation from the letter of Mr. Whitchouse, which appeared in this journal yesterday.
